CULTURAL GUIDE FOR CACTI AND OTHER SUCCULENTS

Soil Mixture . . . Cacti will thrive in any good porous soil and some are even at home in heavy clay soils. We recommend a mixture of equal parts of leaf mold, coarse sand and good garden loam. If leaf mold is not available, use a small quantity of horticultural peat moss. The addition of a small amount of old mortar or plaster and some charcoal is also beneficial. Screen through quarter-inch mesh and plant up to previous soil mark on the cacti. Before planting, cut off any dry or dead roots on the plants. Do not water for fifteen days after planting and then water only when the soil becomes dry. Do not water too much at one time. All succulents require sun light, but very little direct sun. Do not allow to freeze. A dish garden made up with a large flower pot saucer is very satisfactory for a small indoor cactus garden. Cactus plants must be dry and dormant about two months in winter in order to bloom. New roots will grow on cacti when planted.

I hope the plants reach you in perfect condition. If they do not, please let me know and I will replace any plants that do not arrive in good order. In your display of cactus you'll have all the beauty and romance of the great Southwest. As you look at each cactus, you may think of yourself in the fascinating region of the Colorado River mounted on a western pony gazing at the Mojave Desert wonders. You'll dream of long arms of giant cactus reaching upward into the brilliant sunshine—crowns of white waxen blossoms shining pure against a brazen sky. You may see yourself in southern Arizona where an Organ Pipe cactus stands on a rocky hillside; of Indians gathering its delicious fruit for syrup and wine; or of a warm August evening with a mocking bird whistling from the topmost branch of a rare night-blooming Cereus.

I know you will want to add to your collection of these fascinating plants and so I have listed below some extra special offers for our former customers only—all Postpaid.
